OF HUMAN RACE

The store of Reuben Austin, No. 311 First street, also was broken into by the thieves, but no $8 taken from the cash register. The store of Miss J. W. Allen, at No. 141 First street, was broken into in the same manner, and two dozen silver spoons carried away.

The police say that the robbers averaged in three or four a year ago in the same territory, which were said to have even the work of a man and woman. The burglarized stores are said by the police to show the same mode of operation as those in the area which were robbed in March. The district is a hotbed of the thieves because they are in two's money averaging more than $4,000.

TO wind up a month of surprisingly good business (good even in this store of great expectations and great realizations), a host of stimulating bargains has been arranged. In every column you'll find news worth reading—not "fine writing," but facts of undoubted direct personal advantage to you.

RUN FOR CAR CAUSES DEATH

LOWELL, Feb. 27.—A run of seventy-five yards for a trolley car when it caught and boarded, caused the death from heart failure of John Rieburg to-day.

"It's all off," he exclaimed. Mr. Rieburg, while being treated in a drug store in Seaside square, to which he had been removed after his collapse on the car, hardly had he said this when his prediction was fulfilled and Rieburg expired in the arms of friends.

THE BOSTON AMERICAN

NO. 20 AND 22 SUMMIT ST. BOSTON, JANUARY 27, 1908

"Girl Found Dead"

It Was a Servant Girl That
"A Small News Item"

Copyright, 1908, by American Journal Company.

Seven lines in the news column told it. There was a smell of gas in the home. The gas was turned on full, and Mary, the young servant girl, was dead, a suicide.

The girl was discouraged, and so she had killed herself. That was all that was said about the story. Nothing else will be said, except a few comments here.

We think the "little news item" is worth talking about. It might have a meaning, we should say, to some of the prosperous women that are forever criticizing servants and complaining that they are not sufficiently OBEEDIENT, or CHEAP as to wages, or SUBMISSIVE as to hours and work.

This unhappy girl, found dead from discouragement, gives the other side of the servant girl picture, the side that prosperity ought to think a little about.

It would be a good thing if the prosperous could realize the sad, monotonous lives of the household working women, whom they criticize so freely.

The fat employer, with her straight front, and her furs, and her china, and her foolish social calls, and her self-indulgence, and her schemes for keeping young, when she ought to be proud to be old, has little conception of the life of that other woman—THE SLAVE THAT WORKS FOR HER.

They talk about high wages, of the great happiness of the human being that succeeds in becoming a servant girl in "free America."

What is the servant girl's life? She leaves the open air, the beautiful fields, the bright sky of the old country. She comes here. Her hours of sunlight she spends in some basement or in some tiny apartment house kitchen. At night she crawls from the kitchen to the top of the house, in a room badly ventilated, badly furnished. Whether it be in the rich private house or in the middle class of flat, THE ARCHITECT'S UTTER CONTEMPT FOR THE HUMAN BEING CALLED A SERVANT GIRL IS APPARENT. The sunlight is not needed by her, no air, nor warmth in our architectural planning.

The girl who has been free finds herself the slave of long hours. The employer who indulges herself and her family, who may have a divorce or two to her credit, is "highly moral" or strict when "the servant girl" is concerned.

Working hard all day—uncomfortable in her working quarters, uncomfortable in her wretched imitation of a bedroom, cross-examined as to her movements, criticised for all shortcomings, homelike and friendly, very often the servant girl is not a creature to be envied. She is not what she is represented to be by the artists of comic newspapers or the exaggerated, criticising, hard-to-satisfy minds of employers.

If employers would think occasionally of the welfare and happiness of the workers below stairs, and plan to make their lot easier, there would be less of a "servant girl question," and more decent human beings in the world—UPSTAIRS! in the parlor.

Graft Is More
Precious Than Human Life

That Is Why Scoundrels to Office
—They Rotten the Fire Department

Copyright, 1908, by American Journal Company.

There was a great fire in New York City a few days ago in Fourth avenue. It gutted and destroyed the building in which more than a thousand human beings work daily. The fire broke out fortunately after working hours. If it had happened two or three hours earlier, five hundred lives would have been lost. AND THEY WOULD HAVE BEEN LOST THROUGH GRAFT IN THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.

The story is almost unbelievable in its shameless contempt for human life, as compared with dishonest profit.

The fact has been made public, AND ADMITTED BY THE CHIEF OF THE FIRE DEPARTMENT AND OTHERS, THAT THE FIRE HOSE IS ROTTEN AND UNSAFE. In the effort to fight the recent great Fourth avenue fire, one hose after another burst as soon as the water pressure was turned on. The department was powerless to fight the fire, AND IF A HIGH WIND HAD BEEN BLOWING, IT IS CERTAIN THAT THERE WOULD HAVE BEEN IN NEW YORK A FIRE EQUAL TO THE BALTIMORE FIRE, OR WORSE.

Again, in Williamsburg, there was another fire. Three hundred girls at work in a factory barely escaped with their lives. The flames spread with frightful rapidity, and the firemen, desperately doing their utmost, could only say: "What can we do with rotten hose! How can we fight fire if we cannot turn the water on the flames without the hose bursting!"

Those in charge of the New York fire department declare that there is a law compelling the testing of fire hose, and they have been AFRAID TO TEST THE HOSE, BECAUSE THEY KNEW THE HOSE WOULD BURST AND THEY DREADED TO FACE THE REALITY.

How tested and proved defective have been kept in use BECAUSE THE GRAFTERS IN THE FIRE DEPARTMENT DIDN'T WANT TO CAUSE LOSS TO THE OTHER GRAFTERS OF WHOM THEY HAD BOUGHT THE DEFECTIVE MATERIAL.

It would be interesting to know why the insurance companies, so energetic and punctilious in their exactions where the little individual with his policy is concerned, ARE SO COLD AND INDIFFERENT ABOUT A REALLY GREAT DANGER.

Have the insurance companies no funds at their disposal, no lawyers who could be hired to protect property and the interests of the fire insurance companies themselves?

Let the ordinary individual install an electric light or have four bunches of kindling wood in his cellar, and the insurance companies have plenty of inspectors to investigate and to weep.

Why not investigate and fight energetically the graft in the fire department that endangers the solvency of every insurance company in this country, AND WHAT IS FAR MORE IMPORTANT, ENDANGERS HUMAN LIFE!

Rhyming Is Amusing

THE following rhymes are selected from a great mass produced by the editor of this newspaper in response to a recent editorial calling attention to the difficulty in finding words to rhyme with month, silver, wolf and chimney.

By substituting your "I" in place of "me" makes it a word without and quite absurd, but still it rhymes with your "I."

IN these days of earthquakes and floods, it will give you new ideas of the wonders of the universe and the size of the earth.

It will give you an idea of the tremendous cataclysms through which the human race has passed to reach its present state; and if you read with your spiritual eyes as well as your physical ones, you will understand more fully than any story has been able to make you know about the great everything in life is compared to character building, for you will see that it alone counts, it alone counts on from age to age, from epoch to epoch, from sphere to sphere of thought.

This book will not give you as great evidence as the works of Groucho. You will see how Groucho was written by a man who was moving the horizon of his time, and he told the story according to the mythological belief of that day.

Written in Rock

It is Ragnarok, it is the earth has been written down in rock and stone and fossil; and it gives me (and will, I am sure, give all who have true faith) a new ideal of the greater, a larger ideal of the purpose of life, a larger hope of continued life on other planes of existence.

Nothing Good Perishes

Nothing shall tell the age of this earth. Who shall say how long this planet has been developed up to high forms of life, and how often it has been obliterated in universal fire?
